MISSION LEADER DAN MARTIN LABORS DAILY IN STORE AND PREACHES IN QUIANT TONGUE AT NIGHT.

If the term "canny Scot" had never been invented the existence of Dan Martin, born in Aberdeen, Scotland, teller in a busy Washington avenue wholesale house, by occupation, an evangelist, exhorter, mission leader, by force of conscience, would have brought the term into being.
Kipling's McAndrews, the engineer who heard in the whirling wheels of his engine all the teachings of his Calvinistic faith, is a meek and docile child as compared with the Washington avenue employee, who, after his hard week's toil, expounds his ardent faith in what has been aptly termed "hobo" language, but which is just the sort of terms that McAndrews employed in his magnificent endeavors to voice the divine message that was hymned to him by the rhythmic pulsations of his throbbing engine.

At the People's Fund and Welfare Hall, at Eleventh and Olive street, Dan Martin finds opportunity to tell his wayward hearers how he was, by divine mercy, freed from the temptations of drink, which in his Aberdeen dialect was the "drance," the "wiler" of his existence. So modest, so unassuming, so fearful of exploiting his own virtues, is he, however, that a dozen times he turned his back upon the artist who was seeking his portrait, and then as if to avoid all chances of discovery he snatched his hat and fled from the room in which he was sitting.
"It is not that I am ashamed of my profession of the blessed faith that has saved me from many a form of vice, he explained, 'but this is a world of wickedness, and I am sure it would do me more harm than good if any one thought for a moment that I was consenting to any mention of the work that I have been blessed in doing.'
A few nights ago the first anniversary of Dan Martin's mission work was celebrated at the People's Fund and Welfare Hall. Scores of friends from every walk in life, mostly from the humble ranks assembled to celebrate the occasion. Steaming cups of coffee, savory rolls with butter, helped to cheer the assembly, but better than all, was Dan Martin's vigorous recital of his own salvation, and his urgent, trenchant exhortations to his fellow men to follow his example.
Theologians of any school might well be puzzled to catalogue Dan Martin's creed.

DAN MARTIN, Sturdy Scotch exhorter, who has met with great success in temperance addresses among workmen.

"I am not very sure that I am entirely saved myself," said he, "I got away from the 'drance' of drink, however, by the divine grace, and I thought that was a pretty good thing, so I kept on asking for other blessings.
"God in his mercy has given me great power in preaching his word on the streets of St. Louis, and at our Sabbath and Friday night meetings I do not know that the work of grace has been entirely perfected, but I feel that I am on the right way, and that is much consolation to a man's soul."
Dan says "reet" for right, and he has the winning Aberdeen way of saying the "drance" of drink, however, by the divine grace, and I thought that was a pretty good thing, so I kept on asking for other blessings.
"One must go to one of Dan's meetings to appreciate him and his methods of preaching. The very ruggedness of his terms of speech, his absolute disregard for conventionalities, his conviction and his always apparent determination not to carry his hearers into depths that he has not perfectly sounded for himself are readily accountable for Dan Martin's power as a preacher and practitioner of his simple religious beliefs.
